“ Jim was my first piano teacher and choir director when I was growing up. I spoke with him last at a wedding two years ago. He sat at the table I sat at during the reception. I saw him again last year when I visited Saint Luke's Episcopal Church. One of the tasks Jim had me try doing as a child was to turn pages on long pieces he played on the organ during the service. He would nod his head to indicate when to turn the pages. As I grew up, he took the girls' choir on several outings. He picked me up from school on Wednesdays for choir practice. Some of the hymns he taught us still run through my mind and whenever I hear them I think of him. I do recall him visiting our home for a small group of parishioners who gathered there. The reason was always music. I believe it was his greatest love to share what he knew with others.

“ Jim was such a good person and fun-loving soul. He helped raise me back in the '70's as part of my extended family at St. Luke's. He was a weekly fixture in my life from choir practices, piano lessons, and serving as an acolyte. And he joined us for family celebrations as well. Jim was a great teacher of young people. He always taught us the importance of doing things the correct way - and to have fun while doing it. And he set that example himself. Anyone who heard Jim laugh - and everyone did - would never forget it. The choir in Heaven must be sounding better than ever - and laughing more than ever too.
