“ Words cannot express how much I am going to miss you. It's crazy how life works sometimes. We sort of just drifted apart after high school (as per usual). And then slowly over the years we kind of found each other again! And now for the past 3 or 4 months, you've been my morning hello! The random funny joke in the middle of the day. Another parent that I could confide in, support, or just plain vent with.

I will always appreciate your friendship and genuine honesty. It was never a struggle to get along with you. You were just THERE, back in school and again here in the midst of adulthood. It's a strange irony I suppose...that you were just THERE and now you're just NOT. I hope that in the place you are now, you know that you were loved unconditionally by those who knew you best. That your friends and family will never forget you. That your children will always be loved and cared for. And that your smile will always be on the hearts and minds of everyone whose life you were a part of.

Finally, I pray that you have found your peace in a place where there are no more tears to shed, where the wild horses run, and where the everlasting light may shine upon you forever.

Goodbye Bre...until we meet again.

“ Though your gone in person, we'll always have Big Wheel and other times to remember you by. Sorry for the lost connection FB after I had you already for a friend before, but I needed that time for personal reasons. I'm glad we got back in connection on there though. Miss you, but you are with your friend Serena now who you miss. Prayers to everyone who knew her.
