“ Joe and I had a common love and that was flounder and red drum sharing fishing spots and fishing together when we could. He took his fishing very serious and if you were going to fish with him you better bring plenty of food because you were about to fish from dawn to dusk. We lost touch some after he had his stroke but never stopped thinking of him and always considered him a good friend. I know he loved you very much Jean because we could never have a conversation without mentioning you. I will miss you my friend.
